

This invention provides a lens device to be mounted on a television camera and capable of executing appropriate process even when it is used in combination with the cameras of different characteristics. The lens device has an interface circuit of which characteristics are switchable according to the camera to be used, whereby the characteristics of the lens device match those of the television camera used.

10